

GIZMODO

Cameras Computing Entertainment Mobile Online More ▾

search

GEEK OUT

Movable And Adjustable Spaces: The Airstream Kitchen Office

By Adam Dachis on March 16, 2011 at 6:55 AM

Like

retweet

Matthew Hoffman restored a '70s era Airstream trailer and hid the office in the kitchen. A restaurant-style booth makes for both a great working space and a place to eat.

As you can see in the photo, the printer is hidden in a sliding drawer that's part of the booth. An articulating arm allows the iMac to come forward when it's time to work and recede back when it's time to eat. It's a very clever use of the space and something that isn't restricted to trailers. The original Razorfish offices in New York used to have computer lunch booths and they worked well for small lunch meetings. Personally, I'd love to have a setup like this in my home someday. It's hard to hate a booth.

Airstream Dreams Desire to Inspire via [Unplggd]

Republished from Lifehacker

Tagged: design desks geek out workspaces

SHARE

« Previous Post: Double Your Kid's Birthday Present Haul With Cardboard Box Wheels

Next Post: An Eco-Friendly Redesign For The Syringe »

Comments \(AU Comments\) | US Comments

There are currently no local comments for this post.

Post Your Comments

Got something to say? There are two ways to comment:

1. Guests

Click here to comment instantly.

2. Facebook Users

Click below to comment using your Facebook account.

Community

Login with Facebook:

Login with Facebook

Visitors Friends Comments

L A S T V
view more...

Powered by Sociable!

Facebook

Follow us on Facebook

Like 3K

Editor's Picks

- iPad 2 Review
- NFC Is Coming To Australia Sooner Than Later
- Is It Possible To Build A Disaster-Proof Nuclear Power Plant?
- How To Ditch Slow Wireless Speeds And Go Completely Wired
- How To Replace Your Wallet With Your Phone